The operators of a waste management center typically charge a fee for processing drop-offs. However, they recently devised a plan to break down objects into valuable raw materials such as metal and lumber, rather than disposing of the objects in a landfill.

The operators of a waste management center typically charge a fee for processing drop-offs. However, they recently received a request from a local homeless shelter for objects that can be used as storage, that can be comfortably sat/slept upon, or otherwise could function as furniture for those in need.
